OUR PIONEER HERITAGE

At daybreak the men went for their animals preparatory to hitching them to the wagons and found to their horror that the throats of all the mules had been cut and the hindquarters of most of them removed. Many of the Kanarra horses were also gone. Quickly they spread the alarm. Scouting the fields and hills nearby they discovered that the vandals had gone north. The wagons were brought into town for safety and soon a number of the younger men and boys of Kanarra had joined the group in pursuit of those who had committed the crime. When they arrived at Cedar City they met the herd boys, who for that day were David Bullock, August Mckelsprung and Martin Chatterly. They offered to get their companions to take their places so that they could join in the hunt. Other boys took over and were instructed to have another group follow as quickly as possible with food, guns and ammunition. The trail

The trail was soon picked up and followed into the Summit Mountains. It was evident that the stock had been stolen soon after midnight because of the distance the Indians had traveled. The horsemen went as fast as they could and the Indians had traveled. The looking back to see if they were followed.

The second group, after getting the necessary supplies, started up the Cedar mountains. As they rounded a curve in the trail they saw a number of men resting under some trees in the trail they saw caught up with the advance company and, hurriedly refreshing themselves with food, the combined groups traveled on. They soon they could smell the smoke from a campfire and in the distance saw the Indians near a beautiful body of water preparing a meal. The men were ordered to flank the lake on three sides and, at a given signal to all fire at once. The startled Indians quickly mounted their horses and fled to the east.

they discovered that most of the stolen animals had been left behind. Changing their animals for fresher ones, they decided before leaving the canyon to once more view this beautiful body of water and give it a name. The decision was quickly made that it should be called Narabo Lake because of their experience there, and the lake is still known by that name. It is surrounded by pink cliffs, black lava flows and forests of pine, spruce and aspen and is considered one of the most beautiful of the mountain lakes in that area.—Margaret M. Urie

EMERY COUNTY

Devent Lake, as the name implies, is a veritable lake, forming an oasis in the desert. It is situated six miles east of Cleveland, Utah, at the base of the Cedar mountains, and covers an area of one-half mile square. In 1885 a party of men consisting of W. J. Powell and sons, John Thayne, S. Winder and a few others began the work of filling a mountain pass to reservoir the waste waters from the Cleveland farms. By continuous labor and determination to conquer, the people have succeeded in creating an independent lake, from which water is obtained for domestic and irrigation purposes. The settlement has some nice farms, surrounded by beautiful shade trees, and producing an abundance of cereals and alfalfa. A store and post-office are operated by S. Winder, and a good schoolhouse furnishes ample accommodations for forty-five pupils, the present school population (1898).

Practically untouched by roads or trails, this great forested fishing and camping area is as primal as it was when early trappers roamed its areas. As part of the Wasatch National Forest, it will constitute the heart of the new Woon-de-land National Forest. The Congress of the United States was set aside by Act of President of the United States Woodrow Wilson in 1916 for the protection of the forests and streams of the United States.
